Sample preparation for the detection of protein biomarkers by surface-enhanced Raman spectroscopy. In a continuous flow microfluidic chip, biomarkers in body fluids can be identified by surface-enhanced Raman spectroscopy (SERS) which is a highly selective and sensitive analytical tool to probe the chemical composition of biological samples. Biomarkers, which have previously been identified by immunoassays, mass spectrometry, and others, can be quantified at ultra-low concentrations. Here, we demonstrate that we can detect proteins in human serum by combining SERS with microfluidics. The concentration of proteins was determined by SERS and compared to the protein concentration e24f408de9
